

Public consultation on a proposal for an initiative on greater transparency in sponsored political content, and other supporting measures

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

The digital revolution has transformed democratic politics. Political campaigns are now run not only on the doorstep, billboards, radio waves and TV screens, but also online. This gives political actors new opportunities to reach out to voters, and new opportunities for civic engagement and public participation. However, the rapid growth of online campaigning and online platforms has also opened up new vulnerabilities. This can apply to national, regional, municipal and European elections, as well referenda. The definition of partisan or political advertising varies across Member States and around the world. In some Member States, political ads may only be placed by political actors (e.g. parties and candidates), and are limited in their financing and when they can be used. Other ads with more general political messages, aims or effects (i.e. regarding more general political issues such as the environment or migration – ‘issues ads’) are also placed, including by other actors (companies, civil society, citizens but also political parties) and during other periods than in the context of an election.

Political ads can be placed through publishers (radio, television, media websites and commercial websites, social networks and other online platforms) by a variety of actors, ranging from political parties to communication consultancies and advertising agencies. Their preparation and financing can involve many service providers, from banks to data brokers and analysis, often with a cross-border element. The relevant rules are mostly national, and often diverge. In some cases they do not cover the online environment. They can thus cause legal uncertainty and have potential gaps and loopholes in their enforcement.

Attempts to interfere in recent elections, including European elections, and manipulate the democratic debate have intensified. Political advertising is one of the ways that information manipulation is amplified and disseminated, and through which political interference can be achieved. The content of an ad can be misleading, or the way that it is circulated (including by micro-targeting specific messages tailored to particular groups) and amplified (for instance by political actors posing as ordinary voters). Online advertising and the overall digitalisation of political campaigning may therefore have adverse impacts on democracy.

Citizens need access to transparent information on political ads to participate in the political debate, freely take political decisions and hold politicians accountable. Journalists, researchers, fact-checkers and other stakeholders also rely on transparency. In addition, public authorities can only monitor and enforce relevant rules on political advertising if all actors involved act transparently. There can be legitimate reasons for certain limitations to transparency, not least to protect personal data. The use of citizens’ personal data must comply fully with the General Data Protection Regulation.

The European Democracy Action Plan recognises the need for more transparency in political advertising and communication, and the commercial activities related to it, in order for citizens, civil society and responsible authorities to be able to see clearly the source and purpose of such advertising. The European Democracy Action Plan therefore announced a legislative proposal on the transparency of sponsored political content as well as support measures and guidance for Member States and other actors, such as national political parties and competent authorities.

This initiative addresses all actors involved in financing, preparing, placing and disseminating political advertising (such as political and marketing consultancies and advertising and campaign organisations) and complements the rules set out in the proposal for a Digital Services Act, which applies to online intermediaries, and the wider EU framework for the digital services market. It is also complementary to the revised Audiovisual Media Services Directive, which extends the European qualitative standards applicable to audiovisual commercial communications in traditional audiovisual media services to those available on video-sharing platforms. The initiative will cover both online and offline activities, and could cover the range of elections in the EU, including European Parliamentary elections. More information can be found in the inc option impact assessment for this initiative. The initiative will be complemented by the revised Regulation on the statute and funding of European political parties and foundations, planned for Q3 of 2021 that aims to increase transparency of funding for European political parties and foundations and to enhance the European dimension of European elections.

This public consultation builds on the extensive consultation conducted by the Commission recently, including for the Digital Services Act and the European Democracy Action Plan. It is an opportunity to further explore the particular issues raised by an intervention to introduce greater transparency in political advertising and related measures, including how it could contribute to the resilience of democracy in Europe, to the overall transparency of political campaigning, as well as to understanding how relevant market actors might be affected.

We want to hear from you!

The European Commission welcomes views from European citizens on the issues that concern them. That is why we have prepared this consultation – your views and experience are essential to shaping our policies to serve the interests of European citizens.

You can send us your views until 2 April 2021. The Commission will prepare a consolidated and anonymous analysis of all responses to the questionnaire and publish it online.

How to take part

Answering this questionnaire (in any official EU language) should take between 15 and 20 minutes. The questionnaire closes with an open question for you to include suggestions and other views, and a question to allow you to indicate whether we may contact you to follow up.

Civil society organisations, public authorities and private businesses also have the possibility to complement their submission by additional position papers to just-transparency-consultation@ec.europa.eu. In the email, please, specify your name, nationality, the name of your organisation (if relevant) and your function in the organisation.

You can learn more about the use of the answers in the privacy statement.

Questions on political advertising and related services

Political advertising can cover a wide range of activities and a wide range of formats, from leaflets to radio, billboards, websites and social media. Political ads can promote particular parties or candidates, they can impart information, raise money or address political subjects more generally. They are regulated and defined differently from state to state, but for the purposes of this consultation we would approach this term very broadly.

Q1. Is political advertising permitted for elections in your home country?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Q2. Which format of political ads have you encountered most often in your country?

- a. Leaflets
- b. Posters
- c. Radio
- d. TV
- e. Online
- f. Other

Q3. Have you ever encountered any of the following (check all which apply):

- an advert raising money for a political objective (cause, candidate, party etc)
- an advert promoting participation in an election
- an advert providing essential information about an election (public service information)
- an advert attacking another political movement, actor, party or group
- sponsored political editorial in a newspaper or magazine
- an ad which promoted a political view without clearly being a political ad (an 'issues ad')
- political advertising outside an election period
- political advertising promoted in your country which appeared to be sponsored from outside your country
- political advertising in European Parliamentary election promoted by a European (not national) political party

Q3.1 Should definitions of political advertising include the following:

	include	exclude	neutral	Don't know
an advert raising money for a political objective (cause, candidate, party etc)	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
an advert promoting participation in an election	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
an advert providing essential information about an election (public service information)	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
an advert attacking another political movement, actor, party or group	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
sponsored political editorial in a newspaper or magazine	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
an ad which promoted a political view without clearly being a political ad (an 'issues ad')	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
political advertising outside an election period	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
political advertising promoted in your country which appeared to be sponsored from outside your country	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
political advertising in European Parliamentary election promoted by a European (not national) political party	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>

Please explain your response (optional)

The definition is not as central as an issue as what is intended to be done with 'political advertisement' - if very few restrictions are envisioned, then it would make sense to define political advertising broadly. The more there are restrictions related to political advertising, the more nuanced should be the attempts to discern 'sub-types' of advertising (the restrictions should be stronger to typical political ads before elections, weaker - to ads on social issues unrelated to elections, very weak - related to ads providing essential information about elections).

Q3.2 Should definitions of political advertising be:

- a. Defined in law
- b. Dynamically adaptable
- c. Don't know
- d. Other

Please explain your response (optional)

Legal certainty requires that restrictions on such essential rights (freedom of political speech) should be stipulated in law.

Q4. Have you ever encountered political advertising online?

- a. Yes
- b. No
- c. Don't know

Q4.1 Roughly how often?

- a. Daily
- b. Weekly
- c. Monthly
- d. Seldom

Please indicate where you have most often or most memorably encountered political ads?

My organisation has been monitoring political advertising for more than 15 years, so I periodically see a large number of political ads across all platforms

Q4.2 Regarding the advertising you encountered, were you able to easily find the following information

	Yes	Maybe	No	Don't know
--	-----	-------	----	------------

1. clear labelling that it was a political ad	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
2. information about who placed the ad	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
3. information about entities sponsoring or co-sponsoring the ad	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
4. information about the amount paid	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
5. (where relevant) information regarding the use of targeting (whether and why the ad was targeted at you specifically)	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
6. Other information about the ad	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>

Please specify

I've probably seen more than 10 000 political ads, so this question is very hard to answer - for some ads the labeling is clear, for others - not; for some it is clear who has been sponsoring ads, for other - not.

Questions on relevant rules for political advertising:

In most Member States, there are rules that limit party spending for election campaigns, which can differ among Member States in their scope and substance, and their applicability online. Within a Member State, they can differ for national, regional, municipal and European elections, and referenda. Rules include upper limits for spending on specific campaigns or political actors, as well as on who and how funding can be obtained. Other rules include who may place political adverts and when.

Q5. Are you aware that there are rules limiting party spending for electoral campaigns in your country?

- a. Yes
- b. No
- c. Don't know

Q5.1 Do you think that the limits of political party spending for electoral campaigns should be:

- a. Increased (more money)
- b. left as they are
- c. decreased (less money)
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

It took many years to build and calibrate the campaign financing system as it currently exists in Latvia. The experience of last elections indicate that the party spending limits are well calibrated in my country.

Q6. Should spending by actors other than political parties (such as foundations and campaign organisations) on political ads during an election period count towards campaign or political party spending limits?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Yes, if such spending has been coordinated with the party's campaign (the system currently in place in Latvia). If not - how can political party be held responsible for such actions?

Q7. Should spending on 'issues ads' during an election period count towards campaign or political party spending limits?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Yes, if it is the same party placing those ads. Then we can assume that this issue add is part of political party's campaign.

Q8. Should civil society and other actors have to follow the same rules as political parties when paying for and placing political advertising?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Not the same - spending limits need to be lower. Similar rules relating to transparency would be reasonable.

Many of the services relevant to political ads, from their design and planning, to their placement and funding, are conducted across borders within the EU single market and also from outside the EU.

Q9. Should there be rules set at EU level on how political adverts can be funded?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

I'm not certain this can be done. In Latvia political parties are not at all allowed to receive donations from organisations (enterprises, NGOs).

Q9.4. Should there be rules set at EU level as to how a specific amount of political advertising during an election should be allocated (for instance through proportionately allocated 'online/offline ad vouchers'), to ensure access for more parties to the campaign?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

I don't see how it could be done, but welcome the idea. We have a similar system for public broadcasters that are required to allocate a specific free advertising proportion for parties (they can sponsor additional advertising by spending their own ads).

Q10. Should there be rules set at EU level requiring all political advertising be clearly and specifically labelled as such?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Q11. Should there be rules requiring all the sponsors of political ads to be disclosed within the ad itself?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe

- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Q12. Should there be rules requiring political ads to be truthful and not misleading about verifiable factual claims?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Who is going to check this?

Q13. Should there be rules in times of elections campaign regulating how advertising space is allocated online?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

I'm not certain that this could be done - taking into account the number of players involved (not just political parties, but other advertisers - individuals, NGOs, enterprises)

Q14. Are you concerned about the possibility of foreign actors (such as foreign states or foreign organisations) being able to sponsor political advertising to increase their own influence within the EU?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Q15. Are you concerned that political advertising, especially online, can be used to intentionally spread false or misleading information (disinformation)?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Q16. Should political actors or organisations that violate or are systematically non-compliant with agreed rules be sanctioned

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Q17. Do you consider that specific measures are needed to ensure that the competent authorities can have more effective oversight over political advertisement online?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Questions on European elections:

European Parliamentary elections are currently organised nationally, according to each Member State's rules, which means that relevant rules such as the periods during which political ads can circulate, the amounts allowed to be spent, and whether they can circulate at all, vary from Member State to Member State.

Q18. Should there be certain common rules for political ads in European Parliamentary elections?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please explain your response (optional)

Maybe it's possible for online advertising, I'm not so certain about, for example, billboards and newspaper advertising. Here Latvia's and, for example, French systems are very hard to harmonize.

Q19. Please indicate your preference

During a European election, who should be able to place a political ad (check one answer only)?

- 1. Any person or legal person (company or foundation), from anywhere
- 2. Any person (not a legal person) from anywhere
- 3. Any person or legal person residing in any Member State
- 4. Any person (not a legal person) residing in any Member State
- 5. Any person or legal person residing in the specific Member State the ad will circulate
- 6. Any person (not legal person) residing in the specific Member State the ad will circulate

Campaigns in European elections are organised nationally, but some parties register to promote candidates in more than one Member State, which means that the administrative formalities must be completed and complied with in each state in order to 'register' a campaign. This can be challenging. Similarly, when citizens wish to campaign for support for a European Citizens Initiative (a way for citizens to help shape the EU by calling on the European Commission to propose new laws), they must do so in multiple Member States.

European political parties do not sponsor particular candidates nationally, but they do campaign in European Parliament elections. They could be required to meet certain specific transparency requirements for the political ads they sponsor.

Q20. Please indicate which you think should apply:

European political parties should

2. maintain examples on their website of the ads they sponsor	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>

Questions on transparency requirements:

Transparency in political ads can support citizens, media and NGOs to hold political actors to account, but it could also support competent authorities. Transparency includes retaining basic information about transactions including the identity of who paid for the advert, the amount paid and what precisely was paid for. It can also involve publishing such information under certain circumstances.

Q21. Should publishers of political ads retain certain basic information from those placing such ads?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Q21.1. What information should be retained? (optional)

How much did it cost; what was the audience; how did it look/sound like; who paid for the ad;

Q21.2. What information should not be retained? (optional)

Other companies are involved in political ads, including in their financing (providing loans, handing donations and fund raising), and preparation and placement (advertising, marketing communications and other specialist agencies and consultancies).

Q22. Should service providers involved in political ads also have obligations to retain and provide information?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe

- c. No
- d. Don't know

Political advertising can be published through various media, online and offline. The online environment introduces many new channels for advertising, such as boosted and targeted social media posts, sponsored search results, and personalised ads appearing within apps, video streaming services, and other websites and online service platforms (such as online retailers).

Q23. Should requirements to retain information apply to all political ads, regardless whether online or offline?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please elaborate your response (optional)

It would be a challenge to find a method to retain information about billboards and new means of advertising (for example light rays in the sky/on buildings)

The Digital Services Act proposes to require all very large online platforms to ensure public access to repositories of advertisements displayed on their online interfaces.

Q24. Should all political ads be made similarly accessible:

- a. only to competent authorities by being retained for a period
- b. specifically registered with the competent authorities
- c. also to citizens, eg through a common online database or by being retained on the advertiser's website
- d. they should not be accessible
- e. don't know

Q24.2 what information should be publicly available (please indicate a response for each row)

	Yes	Maybe	No	Don't know
1. retain the ad itself	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
2. who placed the ad	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
3. the amount paid	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
4. on the use of targeting and amplification techniques	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
5. on when and where the ad appeared (where available)	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>

6. Other	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>

Questions on targeting and amplification:

---

Advertising can be targeted to reach specific people, and it can be amplified to boost its actual or apparent popularity. Targeting can be simple: a political party can circulate campaign material to its registered members. However, increasingly sophisticated tools have come to be used in this process – such as microtargeting, where sophisticated tools and personal and other data are used to direct ads to particular groups of users, allowing the messaging to be personalised and even manipulative. Other techniques exploit features of the online architecture to increase the impact of ads, for instance through deliberately polarising messaging to exploit user-interaction based ranking, or even through manipulated interactions to increase the circulation of messages.

Q25. Should there be any additional limits on targeting and amplification methods, besides compliance with data protection rules?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Q25.2 Complete all which apply

Should EU rules control the following other amplification methods?

	Yes	Maybe	No	Don't know
1. paid for likes	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
2. bot software	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
3. paid for influencers	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
4. Other	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input checked="" type="radio"/>

Q26. Provided relevant data protection rules are complied with (e.g. that explicit consent to the use of the relevant data was obtained) do you think the targeting of political ads could be allowed for certain criteria (eg by geographic location, income bracket, gender, age, political affiliation, and general preferences and interests derived from a user's online activity)?

- a. Yes
- b. Maybe
- c. No
- d. Don't know

Please specify which criteria could be allowed

It would not be reasonable to not allow targeting for political and social ads

This is an extremely challenging issue, filled with stumbling blocks, therefore it might make sense to focus on a more narrowly defined problem - such as only issues relating to ONLINE political ad transparency.

Q28. Would you like to participate in a phone interview to further discuss the topics of this open consultation? If yes, we may contact you through the email provided in the introduction.
